Dear EBHS 2013 conference participants,

Welcome to Baltimore for our 38th annual conference. This year’s program is notable for both quality and quantity, with almost ninety papers, which fit together remarkably well into almost thirty panels. We are thrilled to have Louis Galambos, Professor of History at Johns Hopkins University, to deliver the keynote address. And this may be the first time we’ve ever met in a former Masonic temple.

Baltimore is a perfect locale for an economic and business history conference. As a port city on the Chesapeake Bay, Baltimore was one of the most economically vital cities in America’s early history. By 1830 it was second only to New York in population. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad launched America’s railroad revolution. The city’s rapid rise as a center of manufacturing and commerce aided its rise as a cultural and educational center, thanks in part to local businessmen-philanthropists like Enoch Pratt, William Thompson Walters and his son Henry, and Johns Hopkins. Like many industrial American cities, Baltimore fell on hard times in recent decades and has tried with varying degrees of success to revitalize itself with public-private partnerships, such as the Inner Harbor and Oriole Park at Camden Yards, and reorient its economy toward the professions, notably higher education and medicine.

If you want to explore the city from the hotel, your best bet is probably North Charles Street. Walking south will quickly take you to the Inner Harbor. The water taxis there are an inexpensive way to get on the bay and possibly visit one of Baltimore’s historic neighborhoods like Little Italy or (my favorite) Fells Point. Some of us will make that walk on Friday afternoon, for our guided tour of Oriole Park at Camden Yards.

An easier walking option is to go north on North Charles Street, which will almost immediately put you in the Mount Vernon Cultural District, an attractive shopping, dining, and sightseeing area. You will notice helpful signs and plaques by some of the buildings, which give information about each site and provide a map of an excellent tour of the district. Among the landmarks I suggest you not miss are the Walters Art Museum, the Washington Monument (which predates the one in Washington, DC), the Basilica of the Assumption, and the Belvedere Hotel.

Lexington Market, which dates back to 1782 and is about four blocks west of the Tremont Grand, is a must if you are curious to try Baltimore seafood. Of the many food options there, I particularly recommend the crab cakes at Faidley’s. (Note: The market is only open until six. For further recommendations, please see my Baltimore guide on the EBHS website.)

Planning this conference has been infinitely easier thanks to the other EBHS trustees, especially Jari Eloranta, Dan Giedeman, Jason Taylor, and Olli Turunen. Thanks also to Program Chair Duncan Philip Connors and our panel chairs and discussants. Thank you for coming to EBHS 2013. I hope you have a great time and join us next year in Manchester.

Ranjit Dighe,
EBHS President

Facilities

The third floor of the Tremont Grand Historic Venue will be conference central. The registration table, book displays, and coffee breaks will be in the third floor lobby. The panels will be in the Veterans Room, the Tuscan Room, and the Composite Room. The member business meeting will be in the Composite Room.

The Tremont Grand conference center is connected to the Tremont hotel via a walkway. The walkway connects the fifth floor of the hotel to the second floor of the conference center. From anywhere in the hotel, take the hotel elevators to the fifth floor and exit to the right. Follow the walkway to the second floor of the Grand. From the second floor take the elevators to the third floor.

Thursday’s reception will take place on the second floor’s open area, La Strada. Tuesday’s trustees meeting is also on the second floor, in the Boardroom.

Friday’s banquet is a plated dinner in the Oriental Room on the fourth floor.

Keynote Speaker
Louis Galambos is Professor of History at Johns Hopkins University, where he also serves as Editor of The Papers of Dwight David Eisenhower and Co-Director of the Institute for Applied Economics, Global Health, and the Study of Business Enterprise.

Professor Galambos is one of the foremost authorities in the areas of modern institutional development, the rise of the bureaucratic state, business-government relations, and the evolution of the professions. Currently his research focus is the process of innovation in public and private organizations. His most recent book is The Creative Society — and the Price Americans Paid for It (Cambridge University Press, 2012).

His professional service has been extensive. Recently he was the Maguire Chair of American History and Ethics for the Library of Congress and an editor of series by Cambridge University Press and Johns Hopkins/AT&T. He has served as President of the Business History Conference and the Economic History Association, as well as Editor of The Journal of Economic History. He is currently a Principal in the Business History Group.

He is a graduate of Indiana University (A.B.) and Yale University (Ph.D).

EBHS 2014 in Manchester

Our next conference will be in Manchester, England, hallowed ground of the industrial revolution.

The dates are May 29 – 31, 2014.

Trustees Mark Billings and Neil Forbes are the organizers of the Manchester conference.

Updates will be provided on the EBHS website www.ebhsoc.org and by email.
